

COREY WILD

Love bites from killer crocs!

Not since the tragic death of Steve Irwin in 2006 has anyone come close to filling the revered 'Croc Hunter's' boots as Australia's next wildlife entertainer, educator and all-round, crusader. Not until now, that is. He has been making film documentaries for four years and loves educating people about wildlife, conservation and the environment.

"I am someone who was greatly inspired by Australia's much loved Crochunter."

From his heartland in Tropical North Queensland's croc-country, comes documentary film maker, Corey Wild. At 33 years of age, this vivacious young bloke - full of Irwinesque energy and passion - but with his own particular style - is ready to present amazing wildlife species to the world. "I've no serious injuries and never been 'in-venomated', just a couple of love bites here and there from 5 foot crocs, they are super fast! It has happened on days where I had to catch 100 in a day by hand, you get a love bite here and there."

While his documentaries educate people about animals that are often misunderstood, Corey broadens his scope to also educate about conservation. "We are in control of the planet and all animals within it. As humans, it is our responsibility to protect and conserve it. People need to learn to be eco friendly, it can even start at home in backyards which are thriving mini eco systems, they can protect and conserve and even plant animal friendly native trees. It's not good to litter, try buying environment friendly products, recycle, research global warming on the internet and think about the future, but think outside the box."

Corey Wild has been making wildlife documentary films for the past three years and this week launches his compelling, six-part series capturing wildlife in Australia and South East Asia. Adrenalin-charged crocodile handling demonstrations, snake rescues and much more are packaged into Corey's Wild World DVD programs (varying in time from 55 minutes to 85 minutes) now available for sale on his website www.coreywild.com

A BROKEN SILENCE

Torcha says 'No cap on how far Ozzie Hip Hop can go on the world stage.'

The expansive genre that is World Music expands by the day, due mainly to the continued growth of the internet, local acts even whole genres are in danger of being lost to World Music, so claim back your quality Aussie Hip Hop. For those of you who don't know much about A Broken Silence then they can be quickly categorised, yet it's hard to pin-point just exactly what it is about this five piece that draws a crowd. Whether it is the general flow of the Hilltop Hoods or the distinct lyric from Dapht to the togetherness of the Herd or the scope of Muph & Plutonic these guys have found the artistic mix that brings world attention. "We've been together for a couple of years now but the stuff it's all new. Myself, and a few of the other guys are all from various other bands. We all got together and they all play different instruments and do some cool things so we thought we would give this a go and do something different."

"One hundred thousand people downloaded in Russia alone already in the space of one week."

It seems that amongst the dozen or so good quality Aussie Hip Hop acts that each one has a uniqueness that makes for mass appeal and this outfit is no different. With the recent release of the debut album 'All For What' it's great to hear that most of the planet has jumped on board just as quick as Australia has. Maybe it's that full band sound which excites. "Like one hundred thousand people downloaded in Russia alone already in the space of one week...people are posting our stuff all over in Europe and Asia and we just got a call from a guy in Japan who wants to put us out there so I think because the band stuff is a little more worldly."

When you throw in the fact that they have recently completed a tour with The Whitlam's involving an 88-piece orchestra then you know they'll have some good quality experience to take to the world stage. A Broken Silence will be including Townsville in a soon to be announced National Tour so stay tuned and jump aboard. If it's good enough for Russia? "ALL FOR WHAT" is out now. 'A BROKEN SILENCE' tour TBA.
